UNTITLED

I've grown my nails out for you
Every part of me wants more
Leaves turned toward the sun

The sun sets.

Any memory of the bitter coldness of closing
Evaporates in the clear warm light of morning.
The petals arch their hot backs

This is symbiosis. Who can fight these openings and closings?

There is a wash of twilight come, closed eyes.
The downward pull draws my insides up in awkward ways.
Time sets against the quiet failure of darkness.
